An Oklahoma girl, Colleen Hufford, was beheaded at Vaughan Foods, her place of employment by a Muslim who had repeatedly been trying to convert co-workers to Islam, once more proving this can be no religion of peace.

Alton Alexander Nolen, the Muslim who killed Hufford, was recently dismissed from the business. He was shot by an off-duty policeman during the attack on Hufford and another colleague, however, is in the hospital and is expected to survive.

According to TheBlaze, the discovery of Nolen's religious beliefs, his tries at changing others to Islam, and also the manner in which he killed Hufford have led to authorities probing a lot of deeply into the man's background, to analyze whether or not he has ties to any radical groups that might be in the area.

"After conducting interviews with coworkers of Nolen information was obtained that he recently ... started trying to convert some of his coworkers to the Muslim religion," Jeremy Lewis of the Moore police department said.

Traci Johnson, the other victim attacked by Nolen is in stable condition and police believe she also would've been killed if not for the intervention of the off-duty policeman.

This is shivery.

Generals and leaders from around the world have warned America of radical Islamists infiltrating the country and attacking citizens, and it looks like it's truly starting to happen.

Radical Islam has reared its ugly head within the U.S. and now could be the time to finally declare it the real enemy we tend to face and develop a strategy to put this evil ideology to bed before any more innocent people lose their lives.

He is based in the city of Brussels in Belgium. He was formerly a programme presenter and correspondent for BBC News, presenting the Liquid News programme on BBC News 24 channel (now BBC News Channel) and Entertainment Correspondent for the BBC Six O'Clock News (now BBC News at 6). He became Europe Correspondent in September 2011. Robert was educated at Highgate School, then a boys' independent school, in the Highgate, London, followed by the University of Bristol, where he studied history. He then studied for a postgraduate degree in journalism at the Cardiff School of Journalism, Media and Cultural Studies in Cardiff. Robert spent several years at the BBC, mainly as a correspondent for BBC News but also as chief reporter on BBC Choice's entertainment news show Liquid News.<sup>[2]</sup> It was Robert who discovered the body of presenter Christopher Price after he died from a rare brain infection in 2002.<sup>[3]</sup> Following the end of Liquid News, Robert went on to present The Morning Show, a shortlived daytime show on BBC One with the Pop Idol judge Nicki Chapman, in 2003,<sup>[4]</sup> but that was cancelled after poor viewing figures. Robert joined Sky News in January 2005 as a special correspondent and reported on Live at Five and the former show, The Sky Report, filming a series of undercover reports including one featuring the controversial Kansas preacher Fred Phelps. In June 2006, he was appointed Environment Correspondent for the channel, anchoring Sky News's Green Britain week from Lutterworth, Leicestershire, in January 2007.
